

Mound Septic System

A mound septic system is a type of wastewater treatment system used in areas with high water tables, shallow bedrock, shallow soil depth or other soil limitations. It works by treating and disposing of household wastewater in a way that minimizes the risk of contamination to the surrounding environment

Mound systems are often used in sensitive environmental areas due to their enhanced treatment capabilities and the protection they offer to groundwater resources. However, they require more space and maintenance compared to conventional septic systems.